Background

A licensure compact is an agreement that allows for recognition between member states of a license or credential earned by an individual in a designated profession in another participating state. Licensure compacts are enacted into law by participating states. Twenty-five states, including Colorado, currently participate in a nurse licensure compact.

The Division of Professions and Occupations in the Department of Regulatory Agencies regulates and licenses physical therapists and physical therapy assistants in the state. An individual can obtain a license by meeting certain education and testing requirements or by demonstrating that he or she has equivalent experience and credentials. The application fee is $100. Individuals are required to obtain professional liability insurance prior to practicing as a physical therapist in the state. There are approximately 9,300 licensed physical therapists and certified physical therapy assistants in Colorado.
