Brown bear makes a midnight appearance at Egnar home - family escapes through bedroom window

Insurance adjusters were due at Darcie Sutherland's house July 29, to get a first hand look at the damage a rogue bear left after a midnight visit July 26.

Darcie said she had sun catchers on the inside of her kitchen window and the first thing she heard was glass hitting glass. Her two children, a niece, and a nephew were asleep on the living room floor.

She approached the kitchen and heard grunting outside the window. She remembered screaming, "No bear, no!" but the bear shredded the blinds and started climbing through the window.

She gathered up the four children and pushed them into her bedroom, opened the bedroom window and then decided maybe she would just shoot the bear. She went to a gun safe but had second thoughts and decided she should determine how big the bear was before she decided for sure.

She said the bear totally ignored her and even appeared to be giving itself a bath, having turned on the water in the bath. He was big, too big to try and shoot with four kids to protect. Darcie tried to call her father-in-law, Jim Sutherland, but his telephone didn't respond. She decided the only option was to flee. She pushed the kids out the window barefooted and in night clothes. She rushed to the pickup, got the children safely inside and then remembered the dog. She retraced her path to the house, retrieved the dog and drove four miles to Jim's house.

He got dressed, grabbed his rifle and rushed to the house. The doors were all locked, so he had to climb in the back window. He opened the bedroom door and saw the big cinnamon brown bear eating Rainbow Sprinkles and pickling salt, while smashing bananas with his feet. Jim yelled "Hey bear!" and the bear charged but he was lucky enough to get a killing shot the first time he pulled the trigger. The bear changed directions and ran back into the kitchen before he fell over dead.

The first call was to 911 and then another to Colorado Parks and Wildlife. Officers arrived about 3:30 a.m. They felt the male cinnamon brown bear was four to five years old and weighed 350 to 400 pounds. The officers removed the bear.

Darcie said the bear appeared to have been around the block and knew about human food.

The bear turned over the refrigerator and ripped the door completely off the freezer. The kitchen faucet had been broken, and the kitchen and hall flooded. The bear bashed the kitchen and Darcie said the kids weren't interested in going back to a house that looked like a crime scene: blood, bear poop, and fleas.

Darcie said that she had been seeing bear tracks near a pond not far from the house and had even seen a bear on the deck one night. But she said she had been doing her best not to attract him, taking care not to leave garbage outside and not leaving pet food outside.

She said that before she goes back there will be bars over the kitchen window.

The contents of the refrigerator was scattered, and the door ripped off the freezing compartment. The bear got in through a 14 inch opening in the kitchen window. The sink faucet was broken, which ended up flooding the kitchen and hallway.
