CASE OF ELEANOR LEWIS

Seven years ago in the summer of 2009, Eleanor Lewis had a guardian and conservator appointed even though a doctor testified in court that she could still make her own decisions and didn't need a guardian as she had plenty of help from family members. The judge decided she didn't have professional help from family members. The judge also cancelled all of her power of attorney's that were in place years before any question of her capacity ever came up. Since these individuals became involved she has virtually been a prisoner in her own home. The guardian wouldn't let her speak for herself and cared nothing for her wishes. The control and intimidation of Eleanor, family members and friends continued to escalate to the point of almost total isolation. We were informed that we had to have supervised visits at my Mother's expense even though no one had ever been accused of anything. It was at this point that the family hired an attorney to have the guardian removed. As our attorney put it "Prisoners have more rights than you mother does."

The first thing the guardian did was get rid of family members that had been caring for Eleanor and hired her own daughter's company for 24/7 care. This relationship was never disclosed to family members but was later found out. The guardian then proceeded to remove almost all of our mother's belongings against her wishes. Her home was stripped bare and everything was taken to storage units. After months of having to pay for four storage units, while her house sat empty, the conservator decided to get rid of everything because they contained nothing of value to her estate. Everything they took from my Mother's home was of great value to her.

The Guardian also took Eleanor off the vitamins and nutritional supplements she had been doing so well on and put her on Depakote even though she'd never had seizures, migraines or wasn't bipolar, which are the only approved uses for this drug. Having only mild to moderate memory loss, which isn't unusual for people in their 70's, she was put on a drug which impairs brain function. Listed in the top ten side effects are confusional state, falls, general physical health deterioration, tremor, dementia and depressed levels of consciousness. We were told by the guardian that she had her put on this drug so she would accept the caregivers, the removal of everything from her home and the complete isolation from family and friends. We soon found out these people's method of operation, "Isolate, Medicate, take the Estate."

Even though my Mother had enough money and investments to last the rest of her life we were told by the conservator that her ranch and home would need to be sold to continue paying for her care. What we've seen happen is that they will spend the money as quickly as possible paying themselves, family and friends then sell their wards homes and properties well below market value to an investor they know to make an even bigger profit for themselves. Another one of the tactics we've seen repeatedly used is "Problem, Reaction, Solution," with the solution always being to tighten the control. Apparently with the discovered knowledge of someone's wealth or assets comes the sudden, intense "interest" in their welfare. This is a very lucrative business for these people and they will do everything in their power to remain in control. I sincerely hope we can expose what is going on and start protecting our elder's constitutional rights and assuring them Due Process under the law.
