of jobs in Colorado require postsecondary education, while only approximately sixty-one percent of adults in Colorado have earned a degree or certificate;

(b) According to a 2011 longitudinal study funded by the United States Department of Education, national completion rates for students with disabilities in postsecondary education was thirty-eight percent compared to fifty-one percent for students without a reported disability;

(c) According to a 2019 report from Colorado State University, students who receive appropriate disability support services and accommodations experience better academic outcomes that support post-graduate employment;

(d) To ensure the economic vitality of Colorado, every industry needs access to a skilled workforce, and every Coloradan needs access to sustainable employment;

(e) The statewide implementation of universal and inclusive services, supports, and accommodations for students with disabilities can greatly improve cost efficiencies for institutions of higher education, improve access and successful outcomes for all students, and sustain the workforce and economic vitality of Colorado;

(f) Students with disabilities must be recognized for who they are and supported to address their needs most effectively; and

(g) Colorado does not have statewide data to examine the postsecondary outcomes for students with disabilities, and the lack of information prevents Colorado from connecting students with disabilities to the workforce.
