rare diseases and make recommendations concerning the needs of Coloradans living with rare diseases and their medical providers and caregivers.

The council consists of 12 voting members and one nonvoting member representing the office of health equity in the department. The council's 12 voting members include, in part, a researcher, a geneticist, a physician, a pharmacist, and persons living with rare diseases. Members of the council are appointed by the chairs of the general assembly's health committees.

The bill includes activities that must be carried out by the council and powers of the council. The activities include, in part:

- Convening public hearings and soliciting public comment to assist with a state survey of the needs of individuals in the state living with rare diseases;
- Developing policy recommendations to improve access to rare disease specialists, clinical trials, timely treatment, and affordable and comprehensive health care;
- Educating and making recommendations to state agencies and health insurers concerning issues relating to utilization management procedures for treatment of patients with rare diseases;
- Evaluating and making recommendations concerning newborn screening programs;
- Researching and sharing best practices regarding continuity of care from patients transitioning from pediatric to adult care; and
- Establishing a publicly accessible web page or website to include research, diagnosis, treatment, and other educational materials for providers and patients relating to rare diseases.

The bill authorizes the department to provide assistance to the council.

The council shall contract with a facilitator to provide assistance to the council in carrying out the council's activities, including, in part, conducting meetings, organizing the work of the council, conducting research on issues addressed by the council, conducting public outreach and soliciting public feedback, and publicizing council recommendations.

The council and the facilitator may seek, accept, and expend gifts, grants, and donations for the council's activities.

The bill includes provisions for council meetings, including the number of meetings, notice to the public, and requirements regarding open meetings and public access to council records.

The council must report annually to the governor and the health committees of the general assembly concerning the council's activities, funding, and recommendations addressing the needs of people living with rare diseases.

The council repeals in 10 years unless extended through the sunset process.

1 Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:
